Sorry folks, I have to cancel the auction. Apparently R.O.B. was more despondent than I thought. Last night, after what I thought was a really good day for him, he OD'ed on diodes and reformatted himself. We'll all miss him.

You are bidding on the Super Rare rehabbed version of R.O.B. the Robot for the Nintendo Entertainment System! You are so LUCKY!!!!!!!!!!

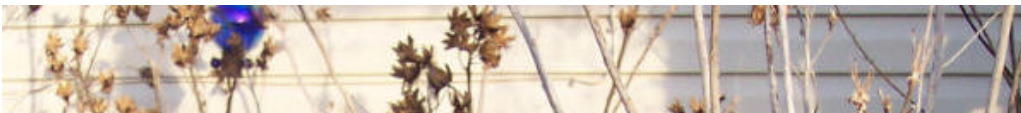

Here's what video game historian Herman Leonard has to say about R.O.B.:

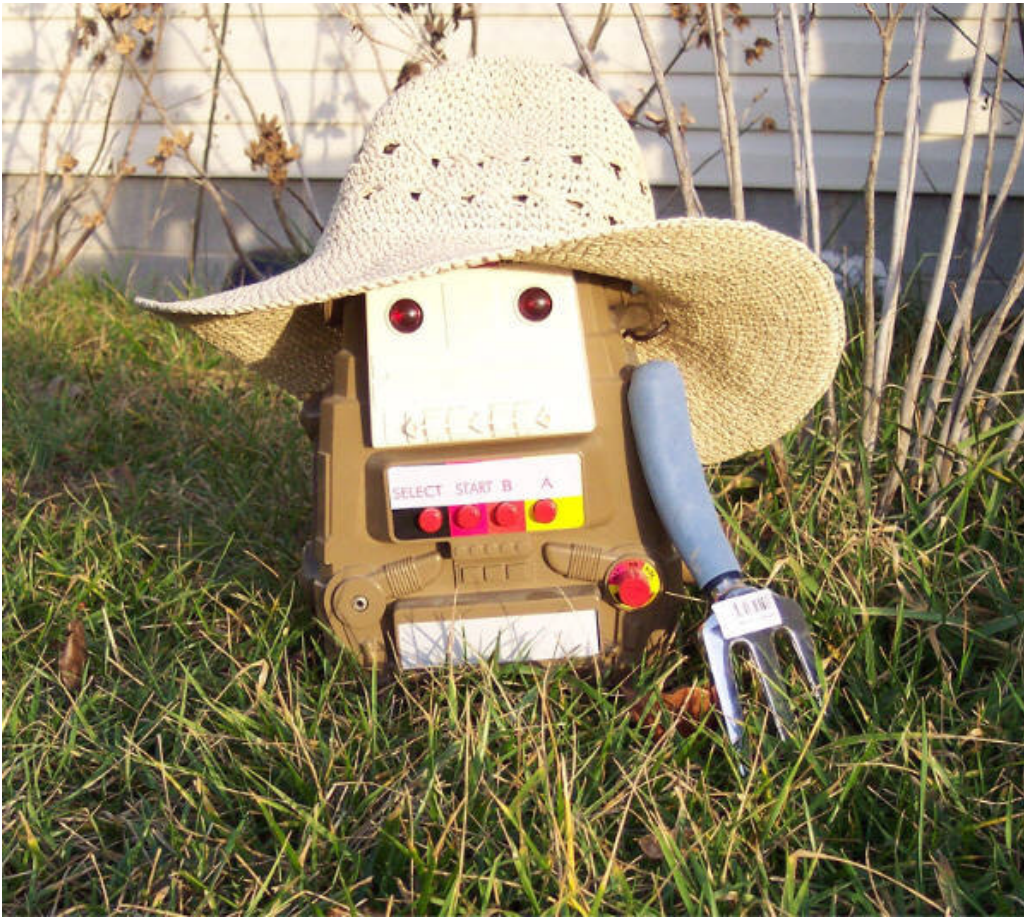

R.O.B. (Robotic Operating Buddy) was included with the first release of the NES in the USA after being a big hit in Japan. This success did not translate to the American market, and R.O.B. was replaced with a Light Zapper in subsequent releases. Not wanting to give up, R.O.B. got a job at the US Mint in Philadelphia, where he stacked coins to be placed in those coin rolls that you get at the bank. Unsatisfied with job conditions there, he traveled to Hollywood, where he began work at a studio stacking film reel cans to be shipped out to multiplexes. It was in Hollywood where his troubles began. He developed an addiction to diodes, which would plague him for the next few years. There was also the plastic surgery "melting" incident, in which he lost the use of his arms. He was involved in a torrid gay affair with Short Circuit's Johnny 5 (Input!) until Johnny left him for Rosie from the Jetsons. He began to put on large amounts of weight as his partying continued. Then, one night after a drunken pub crawl with R2-D2 and Vicki from Small Wonder, R.O.B. decided to end it all in his bungalow at the Chateau Marmont. In a fit of depression and irony, he swallowed an NES system.

R.O.B., after an all night party, passed out in a pool of his own vomit. (courtesy National Enquirer)

Found alive, he was rushed to the hospital, but doctors could not remove the NES system from his body. However, they were able to save his life, and after a visit from celebrity pal Chevy Chase, R.O.B. checked into the Betty Ford Clinic to kick his diode problem.

Now, years later, R.O.B. has embraced his video gaming past. He received a 78 pin transplant, and can now use the NES lodged in his body to play games with kids. "It's a lot better than those damn Famiclones," he says. "I was part of history; I was there, and I want people to know that." He is a bit chunkier these days, and he still cannot move his arms, but he remains optimistic. "I would like to be in the home of kids who will appreciate me for what I am," he says. "Plus, I could use the money."

R.O.B. is a fully functional NES System, and he also likes to ask you questions about various topics in a condescending manner, and he giggles maniacally at his own jokes. He comes with a controller, power supply, RF switch, and a Super Mario Brothers/Duck Hunt cartridge. Only you won't be able to play Duck Hunt, because he's still angry about the whole Light Zapper thing. Sorry. His eyes still light up though, so that's good.

Shipping for R.O.B. will be $35,000.00. This will cover the costs of buying a specially equipped handi-capable van for him to travel to your home in.

I can only accept bidders from US States that are perfectly rectangular (no natural borders please, sorry Tennessee!). I will only accept bids from bidders who have between 1-2 positive feedbacks, seven (7) Rs in their eBay ID, and a squid for a pet. Payment must be made within 10 minutes, and I only accept personal checks with bunnies on them (Bugs Bunny is acceptable, but not Ricochet Rabbit).

Happy Bidding!

Oh, by the way, I reserve the right to cancel any bid at any time for any reason. Nyah!
